Leading Japanese Drum Ensemble Invites Deaf Children to Concert

(TOKYO) Amanojaku, one of the world's most respected taiko (Japanese drum) ensembles, is inviting deaf children and their families, totaling about 20 people, to the group's 20th Anniversary concert. Deaf people may not be able to hear the sounds of a flute, violin, or saxophone, but they can certainly feel and appreciate the booming beat and dance-like choreography of taiko.

In 2003, Amanojaku performed for deaf audiences and led workshops at Rochester Institute of Technology in New York and Gallaudette University in Washington DC. Later that year, the group conducted a workshop for the deaf community in Denver, Colorado.

"It is an honor to give children an opportunity to experience music in a new way," said Amanojaku leader Yoichi Watanabe. "The combination of sound and movement that is unique to taiko allows us as taiko drummers to give back to the community that has supported us for 20 years."
